

The Assistant of Education, Vol. 5: Religious and Literary; Intended for the Use of the Young Persons (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Assistant of Education, Vol. 5: Religious and Literary; Intended for the Use of the Young Persons

We hear Of the beauty Of Consistency - we repeat perpetually, because we hear it, that nothing is so beautiful as a consistent character, but what does it mean? The sinners consistency, alas! Is sin - the false hearts consistency is falsehood - the villains consistency is villainy: but is this beautiful? It is a very common argument in the world, or rather a phrase that supplies the place of one, that it does not signify what religion a man professes, or what faith he holds, provided his conduct be consistent. Consistent with what? His errors? His perversions? That alas! It is but too sure to be. The man who believes there is no God, is consistent when he breaks his laws, and sets his asserted power at defiance. The man who believes that there is no eternity, is consistent when he devotes himself to the things Of time and sense, and is but the more consistent as he becomes the more sensual. He whose perverted judgment and corrupted taste prefer the pleasures of sin to the peace Of holiness, the interests Of time to the bliss Of eternity, is consistent when he takes the one and leaves the other - is consistent when he commits sin, is consistent when he defends it. The basest character on earth may be a consistent one. There cannot, therefore, be a more dangerous maxim - and I name it the rather as my young friends will hear it frequently repeated by the wise and prudent of the world.
