

Cerebus #25 (February 1981)

Cerebus the Aardvark (or simply Cerebus) is an independent comic book, written and illustrated by Canadian artist Dave Sim, with backgrounds by fellow Canadian Gerhard. The title character is a misanthropic three-foot tall bipedal gray aardvark. Cerebus is intricately tied to the religious and political fate of the fictional world of Estarcion and becomes, at various points in the storyline, a mercenary, a Prime Minister, a Pope, a house guest, a bartender, and a messiah. Cerebus refers to himself by name, in the third person, with occasional exceptions in the early issues. The name was originally an accidental misspelling of Cerberus. Cerebus is a morally ambiguous character, at times sympathetic, at others unpalatably callous. He is often foul-mouthed and uncouth, has a vicious temper, and loves getting drunk, to the point where he could be considered an alcoholic. Cerebus's most unusual quality is an innate magnifier ability that he possesses for most of the series run. This ability, which he shows little to no conscious awareness of, is a quasi-magical tendency for events to fall into place around him and become unusually focused and ordered, sometimes with effects that appear to be paranormal, then fall back out of place into chaos in his absence. This ability also affects the people around him to varying degrees. It is also of significant note that Cerebus is the longest running comic series with the same writer. Dave Sim (Writer/Artist) started Cerebus the Aardvark in December of 1977. The series went for 300 issues, 6000 pages, all the way through March 2004, making it, as Sim calls it, the longest narrative in human history.
